Sdl files are attached. Print insert.sdl 10 times. Print the elephants on their backs and at 0.3 scale. Hot glue elephants to the inserts3D models are courtesy of 3Dimka3D parts.rarAssemble the electrical circuit according to the diagram. Drill a hole in the lid for the motor shaft and two holes in the compartment walls for the USB cord and the IR sensor. Glue the Arduino and the breadboard to the bottom of the compartment. Glue the IR sensor to one of the openings on the side of the compartment. Solder the wires to the motor pins. Glue the motor to the lid. Attach the motor wires to the breadboard before closing the lid. Finally, attach the disk to the shaft and place the elephants in order form 01 to 10. If your zoetrope will spin in the wrong direction, simply switch the motor polarity.To be able to control your zoetrope with a remote, first you need to decode its button values. For that upload remote.ino to the Arduino and run the serial monitor. Press a button that you want to use on your remote. The serial bus will show the protocol that remote uses (NECx in my case) and the code of the button. Use this algorithm to get codes for stop (BUTTON_1), medium speed (BUTTON_2), high speed (BUTTON_3), increase speed (UP_ARROW) and decrease speed (DOWN_ARROW) operations.remote.inoAfter you got the remote protocol and codes, you can open main code. Open motor.ino and find lines that define the protocol and button codes. Replace those values with ones you got on the previous step. Upload the code>Your zoetrope is ready. You can control it with your remote, using the buttons you chose. For better effect use the zoetrope in a dark room. Download a strobe app for your smartphone, set it on 16Hz and set medium speed on your zoetrope. When the strobe flashes 10 times per rotation, you will be able to see figures in motion.motor.ino Skip to main contentWho couldn't use a little more ambiance? January 20, 2020I recently saw Little Women, and I liked it. I left the theater with no deep thoughts or strong opinions, but one particular thing about that movie haunted me for days. And no, it wasn't. Am I a Jo or an Amy? (I'm Aunt March.) What I couldn't get out of my mind and spirit was a deep-seated need for a fireplace. I know there's nothing particularly novel about wanting to curl up in front of a fire during the winter, but I became a woman obsessed with placing a fireplace in my very own home. And as I am a renter in Brooklyn, my only option was to turn to the humble and traditionally looked-down-upon electric fireplace.I am not alone on this quest for a cozy albeit fake fireplace, it turns out, as Claire Lampan at Gothamist is feeling a similar yearning. With more millennials embracing "granny-chic" or "traditional" design, turning toward chintz, floral patterns, and other things we found in our great-aunt's houses growing up, an electric fireplace seems to slide right into the blend of familiar yet trendy. Sure you don't get the woody smell of the real thing or the satisfaction of building a fire with your own hands, but you also don't have to haul logs home on the Q train, worry about cleaning a chimney, or risk your little sister lighting your manuscript on fire. If you would also like to fake your way into a hearth, I've rounded up a few electric fireplace options to keep you toasty and nostalgic all winter long. There's one for every sensibility.All products featured on Architectural Digest are independently selected by our editors. Something kind of kitschy, but not overtly so, that would add just a little extra heat to my room. One that would make my guests say, "Hey, is that an electric fireplace?" and then go about their business. This little stove offers up two heat settings and fake flames and is small enough to tuck into your quaintest corner, all for a very reasonable price.I'm overwhelmed by the features of this fireplace: There's a remote; there's 3D technology, there's infrared quartz so the air doesn't get too dry. Plus, it comes in a variety of colors. The red colorway has such a strong "read a novel with a cat on your lap" vibe that I might have to buy it for every introvert I know.Not fully modern, but not fully log cabin, the Hollis Fireplace is a great clean-lined option that doesn't sacrifice coziness. It comes in both black and white, but we've done our research and have to say it's one of the better white options on the market.If your fireplace fantasy is incomplete without a mantel to decorate with your favorite things, look no further. With its remote control and multiple heat and flame options, you can set the mood to whatever helps show off your tchotchkes best.If your tastes run a little more midcentury, the Zircon is here for you. A staple in stylish living rooms since the mid-20th century, it now comes in electric for folks who just want to plug in and tune out.The most modern of our fireplace options, this isn't even electric. This spaceship-y little guy burns clean ethanol that's safe indoors or out, so if you're looking for something that can go from apartment living room to shared backyard, grab this little number for all-seasons fireplace fun.
